Read the text below. Then answer the questions.*YOUNG SUPERCHEF: A student's guide to cooking

After a thrilling final last night, the winner of this year's Young Superchef competition has been announced. James Penry, a 19-year-old engineering student, has beaten 120 other contestants to win the title of Young Superchef. Here James tells us about how he first got into cooking.

"My first term at university was fantastic! I met lots of interesting people, I spent a lot of time going to parties and playing football for the university team and I even did a little work, too! But I was so busy with going to lectures (=lessons), parties and sports practice that I didn't bother to cook. I had a couple of snack bars for breakfast, a few slices of bread and some crisps for lunch, followed by a big bar of chocolate, and then I usually had sausage and chips at the college canteen in the evening. I didn't eat any fruit or vegetables. I started to feel tired all the time and my skin and hair looked awful. When I went home over the holidays my dad and my sisters were really shocked at my state of health. They spent every day over the next two weeks teaching me how to cook. I've learned that it is possible to cook great food even when you don't have much money. You don't have to buy many expensive ingredients. I get very little food from the supermarket – instead I buy fresh fruit and vegetables from the local market, and I buy pasta, rice, lentils, kidney beans and other things online – you can get them really cheaply if you buy them in bulk. I love making stir fries (=émincés) in my wok or cooking some soup or stew. I like spicy food, and a little cumin can make a boring dish taste much better. Very few of my friends can cook as well as me, so I get a lot of visitors to my house at dinner time!

For the competition, I created a traditional British menu. The starter was tomato and basil soup, followed by roast chicken with broccoli and roast potatoes. The dessert was a warm dark chocolate pudding with vanilla ice cream."
